FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
GHG Corporation President Receives Emerging E-10 Award from Houston Minority Business Council

Houston, Texas (November 27, 2001)

GHG President, Israel Galvan, was recently presented with the Houston Minority Business Council's (HMBC) Emerging E-10 award. Mr. Galvan was presented the award for GHG's innovative intranet based employee time management system and for outstanding community involvement. The E-10 is awarded to ten Houston area minority-owned companies each year who are setting trends and embracing tomorrow's business marketplace concepts in the new millennium.

"I am very pleased and honored to receive this award for GHG Corporation. Our employees are the key to GHG's success. We hire top IT talent, listen to their ideas, and give them the freedom to create solutions." stated Galvan. "The Intranet based time management system is a great example of the ingenuity of our employees. This solution has greatly improved the efficiency of the employee time tracking process and will provide significant time and costs savings on an ongoing basis."

The award, presented at a Luncheon at the J.W. Marriott recently, is intended to recognize minority business enterprises making significant contributions to their industry and community, heighten awareness of the expanding role minority business enterprises play in Houston's business marketplace, and communicate successful business strategies that will encourage other companies to strive for excellence in their industry.

GHG Corporation is a Houston-based, minority-owned small business located near the NASA, Johnson Space Center. The company specializes in safety, reliability, and quality assurance engineering; software engineering and advanced training systems design; system administration; computer and software training; and Internet and networking services.
